OF TAMMANY HALL.

A HISTORIC POLITICAL SOCIETY IN THE METROPOLIS.

Matters of Some Interest Regarding the Building Recently Ruined by Fire Where the Society for So Many Years Held Its Meetings.

New York's Tammany society, whose hall was recently ruined by fire, is a very old association. Its originators are said to have been the Liberty Boys, who at the time of those angry disputes which preceded the revolution were in the habit of erecting liberty poles with appropriate ceremonies in the state of New York. These liberty poles, which excited the ire of the British, were frequently cut down by 71 their troopers. As the troubles between the mother country and the colonies developed and the clouds thickened into the storm of revolution, the Lib

They had songs bearing on the questions at issue, among the most popular of which was "The Liberty Tree," composed by Thomas Paine. The following was the refrain: From the east to the west, blow the trumpet to arms.

Thro' the land let the sound of it flee;

Let the far and the near all unite with a cheer in defense of our Liberty Tree.

There is likely some connection between these raisings of liberty poles and the pine tree, which was a common device on colonial

The Tammany society, or Columbian order, was founded in 1789. At first it was not exclusively a political society, but was partly benevolent, one of its objects being to civilize the Indians and make trading citizens of them. In July, 1790, the Tammany society made its first public appearance. The occasion was the visit of a number of Cherokee Indian chiefs to New York for the purpose of making a treaty with a view to selling a large tract of their lands. The members of the Tammany society assembled at the wigwam and marched to the Battery, dressed in Indian costume, received the "braves" and escorted them to the wigwam. There was a grand "powwow," in which Governor Clinton, Thomas Jefferson, secretary of state, and Gen. Knox, secretary of war, and other notables took part.

FIRST TAMMANY HALL-1811.

In 1792 there was a celebration by the society of the third centennial of the discovery of America by Columbus, and a monument to the discoverer was erected in the museum, which was contained in the second story of a building on Broad street, New York. In this museum were kept the battle axes, tomahawks, clubs, pipes, etc., and other presents which had been received by the society. It was under the care of a doorkeeper. Gardiner Baker was the first incumbent. He was permitted to charge a small entrance fee. He became so exorbitant in his charges that it produced trouble. The matter was finally compromised by Baker's agreeing to admit the members of the society free. When Baker died the museum was sold. It formed the nucleus of Scudder's, which was later Barnum's museum.

In 1799 the Wigwam was located very near where the New York postoffice building is now, and looked out on the road to Boston thow Park row) which ran through open fields. These fields were the scene of many of the conflicts between the troopers and the Liberty boys prior to and during the Revolu-

It had become a "tavern" and was used as a place of resort of veterans of the revolution -the Sons of Liberty-wherein to smoke and Brink and fight their battles over again. The son-in-law of Abraham Martling, the proprietor, Wm. B. Cozzins (the West Point notel proprietor), became his partner and was me of the lessees of the old Tammany hall. n 1799 the Broad street building was torn own and the Tammany society took rooms t Martling's tavern, which became the first Cammany hall. After 1808 a subscription as started for a new hall. Twenty-eight housand dollars was raised and a building rected in 1811 on the corner of Nassau and rankfort streets. During the war of 1812 the Tammany society was active in work connected with the war and its hall was beadquarters for con-ultation. The general committee were all Democrats of prominence, and its members were in favor of the war, while the Federals were opposed to it. During the early part of the century Tammany continued to grow in influence as a political society.

In 1867 a new hall was built on Pourteenth street, and on July 4, 1868, the society took possession of it. Some ten years before this move one of Tammany's most remarkable eaders, Fernando Wood, came into power. Being ousted by Tweed and others, Wood organized Mozart Hall as an opposition society, defeated Tammany and regained the control of the city government.

The Sweeny-Tweed regime, the battle fought by Tweed and his followers against the Young Democracy, Tweed's victories and his final overthrow, are matters of recent history.

At the fire which destroyed the hall recently a singular incident occurred. A fireman in breaking one of the windows made a fracture which is very like the profile and head of George Washington.

NORTH CAROLINA NOMINEES.

Fowle and Holt, Dockery and Pritchard, Before the People.

Daniel G. Fowle, Democratic nominee for governor of North Carolina, was born in Washington, Beaufort county, N. C., in 1831. At 20 years of age he was graduated at Princeton college with honor, and, returning to North Carolina, studied law. He was admitted to the bar in 1853, and soon after became a resident of Raleigh. He soon became a lawyer of eminence, but his career as an attorney was interrupted to enter the Confederate service as a lieutenant of infantry. He was made major and assistant commissary of subsistence, but was soon after promoted to be lieutenant colonei. He was captured by Burnside's force at the battle of Roanoke Island in 1862, but was paroled not long after. In the autumn of the same year he was elected to the legislature, and upon its adjournment Governor Vance made him adjutant general. In 1863 he resigned and again entered the legislature. At the close of the war he was made a judge of the North Carolina superior court, Judge Fowle resigned his judgeship in 1867; since that time he has held a number of positions of trust.

The next morning every Democratic member had a red bandanna handkerchief in his pocket and a red rose in his button hole. campaign. Governor Foster when he ran for the governorship of Ohio was known as Calico Charlie," and "Old Tippecanoe" gave Harrison many a vote. "Old Zach" helped Taylor to the presidency, and the familiar words "Jim Blaine" and the "Plumed Knight" have added to the Maine statesman's friends. Webster was all the better appreciated from his title of "Black Dan," and Henry Clay's friends rejoiced in calling him "Harry of the West." We know Tom Benton better from his having been called "Old Bullion," and "Old Hickory" was one of the strongest elements of Jackson's success.

Speaking of the red bandanna, Thurman has brought himself to the front as the user of this kind because he uses a handkerchief three times to the ordinary man's one. He is an inveterate snuffer and he likes to titilate his nose with the insinuating powder. While be was in the senate he patronized the senatorial snuff box, and Doorkeeper Bassett furnished him a fresh allowance of Maccaboy periodically. One of the best things ever published about Thurman was an article by Howard Carroll, of The New York Times, which was finally put in a little book called Twelve Americans." In this Carroll tells how Thurman first learned to snuff, and I tell the story somewhat as he gives it.

Thurman was, you know, the son of a Methodist preacher, and was born in Virginia. He moved to Chillicothe, O., when he was about six years old, with his parents, and his father engaged in wool carding. His mother taught school, and it is from her, I doubt not, that Thurman gets the most of his greatness. She was a half sister of the Hon, William Allen, better known as "Foghorn Allen." Allen G. Thurman studied with her, and he became, it is said, so good in mathematics that his schoolmates called him "Right Angled Triangle Thurman."

It was while he was a boy here that a Frenchman named Gregoire came to Chillicothe. He was a man of remarkable culture. He was educated at Caldwell institute, Hills- and had been educated as a Catholic priest, boro, and attended the State university at but had never taken the orders. While Chapel Hill in 1849. worse for their little nips. They liked, however, a good quality of stimulant, and they were not ashamed of it.

Allen G. Thurman made no money in the United States senate. It cost him more than his salary to live at Washington, and his honesty never has been questioned. He was rather the foe of the lobbyists than their friend, and a good story has been told of how he circumvented a railroad lobby a few years ago. I think it was in connection with the passage of the Thurman sinking fund The Gould-Huntington lobby wanted it defeated, and I think that both Jay Gould and C. P. Huntington were here. They were confident that they were going to defeat the bill, and they claimed that they had forty votes. It was near the last of the session and Thurman knew that he would have to pass a bill by midnight of a certain day or it would not pass at all. The hours were rapidly passing and the fill-bustering of the opponents of the bill promised to defeat it, when Thurman arose with a roll call of the s nate in his hand and said: Mr. President, I understand that the opponents of this bill are confident of victory. They claim they have enough votes pledged to defeat the bill, and I have here a roll call of the senate, with the names checked upon it of the senators who we are well advised are rehed upon by the agents of this power-ful lobby to vote against it." He then said in substance that he would watch the voting upon the bill with great interest, and he would like to see how well the vote would tally with the list with which he had been furnished. The vote was taken. If the senators had pledged themselves to vote against the bill they saw they could not do it under such a suspicion, and they changed their votes. The result was the bill passed the senate. It passed the house. It became a law. Jay Gould left Washington, and I think he has been content since then to let his agents manage his congressional business.

I came across a letter the other day which was printed some years ago and which was signed by ex-Senator Allen, of Chillicothe. It certifies to young Allen Thurman's character and advises his admission to the bar. The original of the letter exists among the archives of the old court house at Chillicothe. It reads as follows:

I hereby certify that Allen G. Thurman is a person of good moral character; that he has resided in this state for the last fourteen years: that he has regularly and attentively studied the law, under my direction, in this place, for and during the term of about two years previous to the 1st of December last, and that I believe him to be a person of sufficient knowledge and ability to discharge the duties of an attorney and counselor at law. WILLIAM ALLEN.

Chillicothe, O., June 9, 1835.

Hon. Allen G. Thurman was admitted to the bar in that city in the old court house, soon to be torn down, on the 15th day of June, 1835, just fifty years ago, and in his early days was a regular attendant at the court of the county. During the ten years preceding his election to the national conress he did not miss one term of court.

It was his hard work at the law that broke down his health. He was in with his uncle William Allen as partner, and Allen devoted all his time to politics and left all the business to Thurman. He had four counties in his circuit, and he rode from one court to another on horseback. It is said that he worked about eighteen hours a day at study or practice, and that he rarely slept more than six. He lost his first law case, but the circumstances were such that it was no fault of his that he did so.

Many curious stories are told of his practice, and at one time it is said that he was hauled up by William D. Wesson, the mayor profanity at this time was a dollar an oath. Wesson had had a friendly chat of an hom with Thurman and upon getting back to his office after it had sent Thurman a judgment of fines of $17, for fifteen oaths and the cost of prosecution. Thurman went with a policeman to Wesson's office and said he wanted to try the case himself. "All right," said the mayor; "the recorder is ready to hear you." "Well," said Tuurman, "I move you to set iside this judgment because you cannot try a man for a crime unless he is present."

"I will set aside the judgment," said the mayor; "but we have had a trial now and the costs will be more. You may go ahead with the case."

"All right," replied Thurman; "but where re the witnesses?"

"You don't need any witnesses, Mr. Thurman; you know you swore those fifteen oaths, and I heard you. There is no use of any wit-

"Well, then, I move to quash the indictment," said Thurman. "In the first place, a man cannot be made to commit himself, and in the second a judge cannot appear before imself as a witness."

This reply took all the ground from under the mayor, and Thurman did not pay the TROMAS J. TODD.

Sources of Mischief in E ting.

The great sources or mischief from eating are three-quantity, frequency, rapidity, and ing fast the stomach, like a bottle being filled through a funnel, is full and overflowing before we know it. But the most important reason is, the food is swallowed before time has been allowed to divide it in sufficiently small pieces with the teeth: for, like ice in a tumbler of water, the smaller the bits are the sooner are they dissolved. It has been seen with the naked eye that if solid food is cut up in pieces small as half a pea, it digests almost as soon, without being chewed at all, as if it had been well masticated. The best plan, therefore, is for all persons to thus omminute their food; for even if it is well chewed the commination is no injury, while it is of very great importance in cases of hurry, forgetfulness or had teeth. Cheerful onversation prevents rapid eating. It remires about five hours for a common meal o dissolve and pass out of the stemach, during which time this organ is incessantly at cork, when it must have repose, as any other muscle or set of muscles, after such a length of effort. Hence persons should not ent within less than a five hours' interval. The heart itself is at rest more toan one-third of its time. The brain perishes without repose. Never force food on the stomach. All are tired when night comes. Every muscle of the body is weary and looks to the bed, but just as we lie down to rest every other part of the body, if we by a hearty meal give the stomach five hours' work, which in its weak state requires a much longer time to perform than at an earlier hour of the day, it is like imposing upon a servant a full day's labor just at the close of a hard day's work. Hence the unwisdom of eating heartily late in the day or evening; and no wonder it has cost many a man his life. Always breakfast before work or exercise. No laborers or active persons should eat an atom later than sunwas a Republican—George F. Edmunds, of down, and then it should not be over half the Vermont. Edmunds and Thurman walked midday meal.
